THE point to which the Judge of the Summary Court recently called attention with reference to suing one partner in a firm in place of the whole, is of much importance; and as he expressed his intention of bringing the matter to the attention of the CHIEF-JUSTICE, it may be desirable to notice its general bearing: It appears that a provision has been introduced into the Foreign Attachment Ordinance enabling parties to sue of Chun-a-yun, that person recognised the plank ance and symptoms when he saw deceased on co-partnerships in the name or names of one or more of the members thereof, whereas, but for the Ordinance, it would have been neces- labor. sary to mention the names of all the members composing such co-partnership. This provision is made in a section of the Foreign employed at the Sugar Works, with refusal of it came in contract with the lips it would be Attachment Ordinance, but the section is so duty. worded that it clearly applies to all cases. He then in cheong, was his shop coolie, and had been so for such had frequently been the case. Of course, this fact can easily be verified by a reference to the records of the Court; but there seems scarcely any room to doubt that the section in question is meant to apply to all cases, and not merely to those arising out of Foreign Attachments, though it is introduced into the Ordinance applying to the latter as a matter of convenience, and on account of its referring to a kindred subject.

Mr. Balt appeared to be under au impression that a provision of the kind was highly objectionable, and that it was desirable to call the attention of the CHIEF-JUSTICE to it in order to have it removed This, of course, could only be done by the introduction of a repealing or modifying Ordinance; but we trust that before any such step be taken the matter will be very carefully considered, and that the various Solici- and the Chinese head man, Yow-a-hing, for the care of it, and another was in the cook house authorities as to the working of such a meawednesday, and defendants admitted to bail the shop deserted, and he then suspected the would doubtless the shop deserted, and he then suspected the would doubtless the shop deserted the working of such a meawell and ne went to see west was use matter, found to make in the national bosons a respect company, and after referring at great length to would awaken in the national bosons a respect company, and after referring at great length to would awaken in the national bosons a respect company, and after referring at great length to would awaken in the national bosons a respect company, and after referring at great length to be would awaken in the national bosons a respect company, and after referring at great length to would awaken in the national bosons a respect company, and after referring at great length to be a supplied to be a suppl sure, and as to its necessity, will be consulted. We believe that opinion is almost unanimous among them as to the desirability of a provision of this kind; and so far as an opinion can be formed upon a matter of this description from general facts, it would seem quite clear that a provision of the kind is absolutely necessary in Hongkong, as it is often extremely, difficult to ascertain who are the the $25 note, be asked for all notes, and he said cal self-lighting lamps. till the 9th instant.

An Inquest was held at the Government Civil Hospital yesterday, at 4 p.m., before the Hon. C. May, who officiated as Coroner, and a jury consisting of Messrs. W. Ross, P. Smith. and E. W. Stevens, on the body of a Chinese servant named Foong-a-choy, who died from the effects of poison. Lum chow-fan, resident doctor at the Tungwa Hospital, declared, stated on the 30th ulto. at 7 a.m. the deceased was brought to the hospital by a man named Chun-a-kee, master of a foreign goods shop. Deceased was in a speechless state, but romited once before being taken out of the chair, discharging a black fluid. He was then placed in the ward when he again vomited a similar fluid, accompanied with a little blood. He enquired from Chun-a-kee what deceased had been taking, and the man who accompanied him said he did not know. The deceased could not speak when interrogated. He gave deceased some mixture to cause vomiting. He vomited again, and he then gave another kind of-mixture, and he did the same. The deceased was then able to tell him what he had taken, and he said be had partaken of some ohemical used to make soda water. Not knowing what antidote to give deceased, he sent to 'the Government Civil Hospital for Dr. Wharry, who came, and administered some drugs, and the deceased vomited again, and seemed to be, in great pain. The fluid was not so dark this time. Dr. Wharry told him to give deceased some milk, and a little opium in it. He gave him some, and he drank it, and several other bottles of milk, but at 10 a.m. of the 31st de ceased died, in great pulp. He reported at the Registrar General course, and the body was sent to the Government Civil Hospital. Deceased spoke with great difficulty, so that he could not get from him how he came to drink the chemical. When the deceased was brought to the Tung wa Hospital, he did not appear to be in a right state of mind. Whether he was chemical, he did not know. Dr. Wharry, superintendent of the Government Civil Rospital, sworp, stated on the morning of the 80th he received communication from the last witness, in consequence of which he went to the Tung-wa Hospital, where he saw the from poisoning by sulphuric acid, his lips and mouth giving strong evidence of anid existing. > THE SHAH'S VISIT TO EUROPE. The Times, noticing the approaching visit of the Shah to Europe, says that it is certainly singular-it appears, indeed, to our Russian contemporaries almost unintelligible—that no sooner should the Central Asia question have been settled than it was pronounced to have b.en no "question" at all. The true key of the political position, it was declared, lay not in Central Asia, but in Persia. India could never be approached from Khiva; but it might be invaded by the old road through Herat and Cabul. These, the latest speculations on the question, seem to have perplexed the Russian journale, though not so much from their irrelevance as their novelty. Why, it is asked, could we not think of all this before we made so superfluous a stir about Khiva, and why should not Russia, if so disposed, be filial piety would probably have obtained his shares, the indomnity for the withdrawal of and Obili come not less regularly into our at the charge of repressing those pradatory or Persia? The Times declines at present to follow our critics into these inquiries. Just now, as regards our relations with Persia, we shall be well satisfied if the hopes of the Shah himself are effectually realized. We heartily wish he may succeed in rendering his kingdom as prosperous as it was in the reign of his predecessor, Shah Abbas the Great. We do not desire to see any objectionable shape given to the new railway system of Persia, or any encroachments attempted on the independence of its Sovereign; but so far as concerns the power of the Shub himself, the more thoroughly it is consolidated the more completely will our in terests be served. A Sovereign so conscious of the importance of the European Powers cannot be indifferent to the opinion of that one among them which is also the greatest Power in Asia. We shall enjoy that advantage in entertaining our Royal guest, and it will be our own fault if we throw it away.

QUACKS. Wherever magic has been able to retain its hold upon the imagination, its charms and anulets have worked as powerfully in the cause of health as physic. It is only when we censo to believe in sorcery and sortilegy-and we never do quite let go our faith in magic and our proclivity to superestition-that we demand of physic to furnish ins a substitute, and, as Courte says, advance from the dominion of feticism to the regency of metaphysical notions. Magical medicine is probably as old as the world. The savages of those prehistoric days, who dwelt in caves and gnawed bones, naked and misgrable as they were, must have had their witch-masters and their workers of spells, their sorcerers. and their makers of annulets. Homer tells us how the wound of Ulysses was cured by the healing touch of the sons of Autolyeus. The Ephesic litera of Diana werd a right. famous amulet with the ancients, among whom, indeed, medicine was always ball magical, half sacerdotal, and always more or less practised by the priests, who, as gobetweens from the gods to the people, were conceded to have an authority over disease not to be exercised by "common men. After the oracles grew dumb and Pan's reputation had grown to be a thing of the past, Christian superstitions easily substituted themselves for the old ethnic superstition. A famous medieval charm was that by means of the names of the three kings of Cologne, hung about the neck upon a piece of pareinnent, with the general legend, "Caspar brings myrrh, Melchior incense, Balthasar gold," and a special entreaty that they would have in charge to heal the particular disease under which the patient was suffering. This charm was particularly efficacious in epilepsy, which as a mysterious disease—the Greeks called it the sacred disease-and one that seemed most certainly to proceed from the stroke of the higher powers, was naturally one for the relief of which supernatural aid would be After the priests, there was still a sort of Levitical family to whom the province of healing belonged of right, as the green turban among-Islamites is the hereditament of the descendants of the Prophet. The seventh son of a seventh son-was a phy: sickin by, destiny, and always had a preterproclivity for setting disease at naught. I have noticed the advertisements of such seventh sons very lately in the newspapers, and as they can afford to advertise, it is fair to suppose they are patronised. The curative power possessed by unother branch of these prescriptive physicians, the not to be wondered at that very few of them magnetists, is something which can neither he explained nor denied. The evidence is too strong for us' to reject the almost miraculous cures performed by Baptista Porta, "Fom Cringle's Log," although the Arab Cardan, Kircher, Gasner, Walentine Graterakes, Mesmer, Cagliostro, &c. - Allantic Monthly.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETIES. " One of the most effectual agencies in the spread of musical knowledge as the amateur musical society. In our time we have been connected with a number, and have a knowledge of many niore. It may be that these up into the interior of the country, and justings may prove interesting, on even useful, opening fre on the attacking parties sticking to others similarly situated. The most pretentions class is the Philharmonic Society. especially in Landon. Such societies are the going forward more or less until comparachief regular purveyors of good music of all kinds, except entire operas. The conductor must be a musician of the highest standing. The band and cherus are of the best material the chorus are amateurs; but the band is r its members are famous soloists with their several instruments. Oratorios, cantalas, For a young artiste to gain a hearing at such concerts is a first step to fame. The audiences can har lly be described. They will represent, more or less, the three millions or more of London, city and suburbs. Then we have the provincial Philharmonic, or harmonic, or housical society. This is generally something more than a mere concertgiving institution. It is a social feature o the town. To it must subscribe every one with any pretence to taste or culture,-ineluding, of course, many whose only claim the pretence,-and every one else who aspires to belong to the "upper classes." The dress places are, consequently, largely occupied by people decently dressed, who will yet talk all through a song, treat any more noise performance as a well-devised cover for conversation, and enter or depart without scruple in the middle of a performance. The cheaper seats are chiefly occupied by people who actually seem to have come for the music alone. It is true you see most copies of the score when a work is performed. The conducte is probably a musican of mark, hailing from London and running down merely for the concert and our rehearsal before it. The " grading" is necessarily done by some subconductor or charus-master, before the great man comes. The principal members of the band have similar engagements in London and the provinces, and lead the same nomadic existence as their chief. The band may also include some amateurs; and the chorus is mainly composed of amateurs, with a few semi-prefessional church singers as leaders. The performances by such societies of oratorio and instrumental works will sometimes reach quite to the metropolitan standard, constituting an admirable local school of music. -Masical World.

Captain Sulivan's book has made its appearance even more opportunely than it might have done had Sir Bartle Frere's mission die as successful as was anticipated in some Looking at the slave question from the standpoint of the Sultan of Zunziber, we can understand and almost symagent than we seem to give him credit for at least they were generally fairly fed. being: He is Sultan no doubt, and uncontempered by a strong public opinion founded on the interests that have peopled the island of Zanzibar and enriched the Arab and Banprince is apt to take the form of insurrection. intrigue, and daggers, and had the Sultan come easily to a pleasant understanding with the English envoy, English goodwill might scarcely have assured him against the domesticdangers he would infallibly have provoked. His cruise in the Castor, about 1849-50, is interesting as giving a vivid idea of the hardships and dangers of the service. It had to be carried on very much in boats, where the provisions often ran short and water was frequently very scarce. The crews were exposed to alternations of scorching sun and heavy plumps of tropical rain. Economy of space was everything, and consequently they had no change of day clothes. So when the rain came down they stowed their clothes away under a tarpaulin and took shelter themselves in the sea up to their necks. As Captain Sulivan remarks, it was remind us of the inimitable descriptions in Current Rates. man-stealers on the eastern coast were less formidable enemies than the Spanish pirates of the western rivers. But there were the same bars with the heavy surfs breaking upon them—the deadly fogs and the feetid mangrove swamps. There were much the same incidents, with the slavers showing a bold front when they could not run the slaves on the mud banks in the creeks. That kind of desultory hide-and-seek work has been lively the other day, when Captain Sulivan went out in command of the Daphne. In spite of it all, the slave trade has been on the increase. There had never been so many and thoroughly drilled. A good many of slaves rescued as in 1868 and 1869. The spasmodic activity of our cruisers, according professional to the backbone, and many of to Captain Sulivan, had positively made the trade more remunerative. The prices rose in the Arabian and Persian slave marts, as symphonies, overtures, and miscellaneous fewer slaves came to be delivered there, and operatic selections, form the staple of the demand exceeded the supply. DOUGLAS LAPRAIK & Co., paratively safe traffic in "domestic slaves" received a steady stimulus. Captain Sulivan very clearly explains the different branches BATAVIA SEA AND FIRE INSURANCE of the eastern slave trade, and how it is that the treaty subsisting with Zanzibar has acted us a cloak to all kinds of illegality. Within his own dominions—that is to say, along 300 to 400 miles of coast—the Zanzibar Sultan can liceuse the slave-trade. He has retained the right to import slaves sufficient for the 'cultivation of the island; but the annual imports amount to some 20,000, while the being deducted at the time of the issue of polabour necessary is estimated at about a liey. tenth, if not a twentieth, of that number. The surplus, of course, is shipped for export, under licenses which pay tax to the treasury. A allow fall of slaves may be lying under the guns of an English cruiser in Zanzibar harbour; there may be no possible question as to the destination of the freight, and yet the Englishman is powerless to interpose is the cause of humanity in waters sanctified by treaty.
